Introduction

By the bequest of Benjamin P. Hunt (1808-1877), merchant, philanthropist and sometime United States Consul at Port-au-Prince, the Boston Public Library received an extensive collection of Caribbean books and manuscripts, especially rich in Haitian materials. Supplementing it have come gifts from other sources, such as the libraries of the prominent Abolitionists William Lloyd Garrison and Wendell Phillips, reflecting their interest in emancipation in the West Indies. All these, combined with materials from a wide range of benefactors and purchases, have led to the presence in Boston of a strong collection of West Indian materials.

The present catalog represents a survey of a limited area in which no particular eminence has seemed likely -- the island of Barbados. The results are none the less impressive. Admittedly, material one might hope to find here is lacking. But at the same time there are items not recorded elsewhere, in Sabin, Frank Cundall's Bibliography of the West Indies, and the like.

This catalog may also serve as an experiment in form and method, towards the preparation of a comprehensive catalog of the Library's entire Caribbean collection. With this in view, references to Barbados which appear in more general works have normally been omitted. And because of the emphasis upon emancipation and anti-slavery, the terminal date for this survey was set at the outbreak of the American Civil War. We venture to hope, moreover, that when a definitive catalog is prepared, existing lacunae will have been filled.
